FAQs

Does financial aid apply to study abroad programs?
Yes! You can take a sample study abroad budget for your program to the Office of Student Financial Aid to find out how much your aid will cover and what other options might be available. More information at: studyabroad.illinois.edu/outgoing-students/costs-scholarships/scholarships/

Are there scholarships to study abroad?
Absolutely! Actually, you pay a small fee every semester to be able to receive a study abroad scholarship through the I4I program. Information on this and other options can be found at: studyabroad.illinois.edu/outgoing-students/costs-scholarships/scholarships/

Is studying abroad expensive?
Not usually. Most Semester and Academic Year programs end up costing the same as a semester on campus. There are, however, a range of programs. You should explore a variety of them and compare costs and benefits to find the program that fits your academic, professional and financial needs.

Do the courses that I take abroad count toward my degree?
All courses taken abroad on a sanctioned study abroad program will count toward your overall hours to degree. However, many programs offer courses that have been articulated as direct equivalents to courses here on campus. This is an important part of choosing a program, and one that you should discuss with your academic advisor.

How do I apply? What are my chances of getting admitted to a program?
First, you will want to attend a Study Abroad Advising Session, to make sure you have the appropriate information. These will be every Monday and Tuesday from 4-5pm in Lincoln Hall 1060. To apply for programs, you can start here: las.illinois.edu/students/international/ for faculty-led short courses, and here: http://studyabroad.illinois.edu/outgoing-students/program-search/ for semester and AY programs.

Why should I study abroad?
Study Abroad will help you to develop leadership skills on a global platform. You will learn initiative and independence while proactively designing your future.
